

David Newman

David Newman is president of Newman Communications, a consulting service specializing in coalition and alliance building, image and issue management, government, media and public relations.

Since 1995 Newman Communications has undertaken a broad range of assignments for a variety of private and public sector clients in fields ranging from resources and environment to business and finance to technology to delivery of government services. David is also editor of Ottawa Mobility News, contributing editor to Summit Magazine, columnist and contributor to CIO Governments Review and an senior associate to several established consulting firms.

Before embarking on an independent consulting career, David worked in a number of senior capacities in the public and private sector, including: Director of Public Relations, Public Affairs and Government Relations and Media and Business Relations at Canada Post Corporation; Director of Development, Ashbury College; Vice-President of Marketing and Development, Converttext Inc.; Director of Public Affairs, Saskatchewan Government Insurance Corporation; and Senior Aide to federal Cabinet Ministers (Mines, Transport, National Defence, Postmaster General).

David Newman is an active community volunteer, working in literacy, public advocacy, business ethics, the arts, education and community service.